ONE of the grandest spectacles in the Kingdom of Thailand, the Royal Barge Procession on the Chao Phraya, – the River of Kings – is an ancient tradition that was revived by His Majesty King Bhumibol Adulyadej in 1959. This breathtaking water-borne procession is reserved for nationally auspicious occasions and has been held only sixteen times during His Majesty’s reign.

HM King Bhumibol is the ninth ruler of the Royal House of Chakri, a dynasty founded in 1782. He is the longest-reigning monarch in Thai history, and has since 1989 been the world’s longest reigning incumbent monarch.

To commemorate the auspicious occasion of HM King Bhumibol’s 84th birthday on December 5, 2011, the Royal Thai Navy will be organizing a Royal Kathin Royal Barge Procession on October 22, 2011 to mark the visit of HM King Bhumibol and members of the royal family to a royal temple to present offerings of saffron kathin robes, food and other necessities, to the monks.

The water-borne procession involves barges carrying the deeply revered Buddha image (Phra Buddha Sihing) and the royal family to present robes to the monks at Wat Arun (Temple of Dawn) to mark Awk Phansa, the end of the three-month Buddhist rains’ retreat in October. During the rainy season, Buddhist monks traditionally return to their temples for what is often called Buddhist lent.

This annual pilgrimage, which usually takes place during the full moon in October and November, is known as Tawt Kathin Luang or the Royal Kathin Ceremony.

The water-borne royal kathin procession on October 22 will consist of a flotilla of 52 traditional-style barges arranged in five columns, based on a battle formation from ancient times. This is made up of four major royal barges – Suphanahongse, Narai Song Suban H.M. King Rama IX, Anantanagaraj and Anekchatbhuchongse, eight barges with animal figureheads and 40 smaller ceremonial barges. A total of 2,098 navy officers from various units within the Royal Thai Navy will serve as oarsmen.

The royal barges of Thailand are the last of their kind in the world. The last time that a royal barge procession was organized was on June 12, 2006 for the diamond jubilee celebrations to mark the 60th anniversary of HM King Bhumibol’s accession to the throne.

Throughout his long reign, HM King Bhumibol has devoted special attention to the preservation of the arts and culture of Thailand. On viewing the ruins of Ayutthaya, His Majesty once remarked: “Ancient ruins always do honour to a nation. Even an old brick from an ancient ruin is worthy of our preservation, for if we do not have Sukhothai, Ayutthaya and Bangkok, then Thailand itself does not mean anything.”

The barges were badly damaged by allied bombing during World War II. Upon his return to Thailand in December 1951, HM King Bhumibol went to inspect the damage and condition of the barges in their dry dock on Bangkok Noi canal on the west bank of the Chao Phraya. The king was gravely concerned about the extensive deterioration of these historic vessels and commissioned their renovation. The ancient tradition of royal barge processions for nationally auspicious occasions was later revived.

The waterways of Siam have served as highways for Thai people for centuries, and Thai life literally revolved around them. The origins of the royal barge procession date from the reign of King Ramkhamhaeng (reign 1275-1316 AD) in the Sukhothai era (circa 1238-1438). Descriptions of royal kathin ceremonies on both land and water have been described as far back as the Ayutthaya era (circa 1351-1767). By the mid-Ayutthaya years, the processions were conducted during the day. By the reign of Rama I (reign 1782-1809) in Bangkok, the rite had been combined with others for waterborne Buddha images.

TAT target 19 million visitors next year

For the year 2012, TAT will still use the successful Amazing Thailand Always Amazes You theme, to build up the country’s strong brand and positioning as a destination that offers a unique culture, a wide variety of experiences to visitors and to reinforce the many aspects of Thainess that are so appealing to visitors from all over the world.

Taking into consideration the underlying conditions and frequent occurrence of global and local crises, six strategies have been identified which are to promote balanced tourism in various dimensions; generate sustainable growth for tourism income; strengthen and sharpen Thailand’s brand image; develop tourism in line with a creative economy; develop stronger and more effective partnerships networks; and optimize internal management.

Under the broad strategic umbrella, the TAT has identified eight specific marketing opportunities. These are expanding the high-income market; expanding niche customer-segments; encouraging repeat travellers; attracting new markets; helping potential partners with win-win projects; enhancing use of IT media applications; helping products and services to attract quality tourists; and increasing the capacity of industry stakeholders to deal with change and tap new opportunities.

Some of the specific activities that will be carried out to achieve these plans include expanding niche markets, attracting new markets, using IT media applications, stimulating domestic travel, stimulating intra-regional travel, organizing activities to encourage better care and preservation of tourist attractions, and create activities for educational travel.

Mr Suraphon said Thailand continued to have a number of unique selling points in terms of a variety of tourist attractions, as a shopping paradise and for online marketing. These factors will help us to reach our targets.

FORESEEING that there would be a need for cleaner fuels in the future, HM King Bhumibol Adulyadej had initiated the palm oil promotion project to extract and refine palm oil for the production of biodiesel. The operation started as a community-based project at the Pikul Thong Development and Study Center in Narathiwat province, where it had been processing palm oil into many products, including some for consumers.

Originally it promoted palm oil extraction at the household level, but in 2000, when the King recommended that palm oil be used to fuel agricultural machines, it was also used in tractors at the centre. The introduction proved to be successful on all fronts, as biodiesel does not pose an ignition problem, engines do not give off a lot of fumes, the exhaust does not smell bad, and acceleration is normal.

Biodiesel is also compatible with most diesel-fuelled engines without a tune-up. And along with reducing greenhouse gas emissions and air pollution, it makes engines more durable because it better lubricates them.

THAILAND TRADE SHOW AT MID-VALLEY

FOR the fourth year running the Department of Export Promotion, Thailand (DEP) organised the Thailand Trade Show 2011 (TTS 2011) at the Mid-Valley Exhibition Centre early August.

The TTS 2011 featured a wider variety of products and services, making it a one-stop platform for consumers who are fond of all things Thai, as well as entrepreneurs seeking for mutually beneficial trade and business opportunities.

This annual exhibition is organized by the Office of Commercial Affairs, Kuala Lumpur under the Department of Export Promotion, Ministry of Commerce, Thailand with the support of the Royal Thai Embassy, the Office of Labour Affairs, Tourism Authority of Thailand (TAT) and Thai Airways International.

This year, the TTS 2011 had some 60 exhibitors from all over Thailand, with a diverse range of products and services from various industries, such as food & beverage, textile, apparels & accessories, cosmetics, health care, pharmaceutical, gifts & decoratives, plastic & household consumer products, printing and tourism.

“This trade show is principally aimed to benefit Malaysian entrepreneurs and industrialists who are eager to explore business opportunities and collaboration with their Thai counterparts,” explains Mrs. Nannatee Wiboonchutikula, the organiser and director of Thai Trade Centre Kuala Lumpur.

Among the highlights of the exhibition were exotic foods, traditional handicrafts, exquisite handmade jewellery and accessories, unique premium gifts, trendy interior decorations, pampering spa and massage services and luxurious, breath-taking holiday destinations.

Apart from the exhibits, there were several contests, games, activities and stage shows throughout the day to entertain the visitors, including Thai cultural dance shows, artistic umbrella painting, creative fruit carving, traditional Thai dessert making as well as Thai cuisine cooking demonstrations by Thai restaurants in Malaysia.

MELAKA: The Tourism Authority of Thailand put up a booth at the Melaka MATTA International Fair, which was held at the Melaka International Trade Centre in Air Keroh.

Some 30,000 people attended the three-day event.

PENANG: The second biggest MATTA International Fair in the country kicked off on July 22-24 in resounding style at the Penang International Sports Arena.

A total of nine sellers from Bangkok and Krabi represented Thailand at the fair which was a tremendous success.

More than 77,000 people attended the three-day event.

KUALA LUMPUR: Thailand, represented by more than 19 hoteliers from Bangkok, Koh Samui, Phuket, Trang Nakhon Sri Thammarat and Krabi, took part in the three-day Matta International Travel Fair at the PWTC in mid-August.

The Tourism Authority of Thailand also brought in Thai traditional dancers from Rajabhat University in Nakhon Sri Thammarat to entertain the crowd at the three-day event.

MATTA FAIRS

SINCE August 1, 2011 the Tourism Authority of Thailand (TAT), Kuala Lumpur Office gets a new Assistant Director – Ms Sudaporn Worapon, replacing Ms Saratwadee Asasupakit, who had returned to Bangkok after her term of office in Malaysia ended.

Ms Sudaporn joined the TAT in 1991 as an Academic Officer, Tourism Academic Documentary Section, Training Division after graduating with a B.A. (History of Arts), Faculty of Archaeology, Silpakorn University.

In 1999 she was promoted to Chief, Business Service Development Section, Service Development Division before being appointed as Chief, Tour Guide Training Section, Training Division two years later.

In 2003, Ms Sudaporn was appointed the Chief, Curriculum Development Section, Tourism Training Network Division, a post she held until her transfer to Kuala Lumpur as Assistant Director.

On this occasion, we would like to wish her predecessor, Ms Saratwadee good luck in her new appointment and welcome Ms Sudaporn to Kuala Lumpur.
